

David Bassano holds a PhD in International, Global, and Comparative History from the University at Albany. His research focuses on the Central American Human Rights Movement in the United States during the 1980s. It explores the efforts of various NGOs in defending human rights in Central America, shedding light on their methodologies and effectiveness.

Bassano has been actively engaged as an educator since 2012. He is an Associate Professor in the Department of History at Brookdale Community College, where he has taught a wide range of courses, including US History, World Civilizations, Human Rights History, and History of Latin America.

Bassano's commitment to human rights extends beyond the classroom. He has delivered numerous public lectures and presentations on indigenous rights, ethical consumerism, and injustice in Chiapas.

In addition to his academic and public engagements, Bassano operates a YouTube channel called "Human Rights Education," where he produces educational content on various human rights issues. His scholarly contributions include publications in reputable journals and a book titled "Fight and Flight: The Central America Human Rights Movement in the United States in the 1980s."

Throughout his career, Bassano has been actively involved in college service, serving on committees and holding leadership roles within the academic community. He continues to advocate for social justice and human rights as a faculty liaison for the CHHANGE Center and a member of the New Jersey Social Justice Remembrance Coalition.

With his expertise in history and dedication to promoting human rights education, David Bassano embodies a commitment to scholarly excellence and social responsibility.
